

H. B. JAMES DIES; HONEYMOON HALTS

Bride for Whom Millionaire Built
Splendid Home Becomes Widow.

Death put a tragic period to the interrupted honeymoon of Harry B. James, millionaire steamship light-erage and pier operator of New York, who died at the Neurological Institute on Monday night, eleven months to the day after his marriage.

Mr. James, whose bride was a Mrs. Cleveland of Waterville, N. Y., had built a splendid country house on an estate at Pindone, L. I., and after the wedding and reception on July 8, 1920, at the Plaza Hotel, where he had been living, he took his bride there.

Although warned by his physicians several years ago that unless he stopped working at top speed, he would suffer serious consequences, Mr. James kept busy looking after his various interests, and about three months after his marriage was compelled to seek treatment in a sanatorium.

Among the concerns in which Mr. James was an officer and director were the Brooklyn and Manhattan Ferry Company; Dockman Street and Englewood Ferry Corporation; Electro-Couch Corporation; Interstate Lighterage and Transportation Company, and the People's Five Cent Bus Corporation.

DISPUTE SOLDIERS' BODIES.

Issue Over Ownership of Those Exhumed Arises in France.

PARIS, June 9.—Ownership of the exhumed body of a soldier who fell in the war has become an issue between the National Union of Combatants and the War Widows' Association, and has been taken up by the Paris press. The dispute concerns claims to ownership by widows and by parents. Here is the position of the National Union of Combatants:

"If the widow does not remarry, the state must recognize her strong love for her husband and give her possession of the body. If she has remarried, though she may still grieve for her soldier dead, his parents must have preference."

Mme. Lavisse, Director of Work of War Widows, declares that the body belongs neither to the widow nor to the parents but should be left at rest where it fell as a spot of glory worthy of the heroic dead.
